York City, and Operative became located in a seat where Operative could overhear the conversation of a number of reporters who had also boarded the train bound for New York City. Operative overheard the following remarks:- "Well, most of the people have an idea that Mrs. Hall did the job, and others think he had someone do it." "Mr. Mott does not consider the story of the woman and the mule, as it was very dark, and it would be impossible for her to see who it truly was." Mr. Mott will not rely on her story too strongly, in other words, he would not ask for an indictment, as he believes Mrs. Hall to be a very refined woman, and he would feel as though he had done an injustice." Another reporter was heard to remark, "Mr. Mott will not put too much stock in the story of Mrs. Gibson, as to his mind there was a question of doubt as to whether this woman, Mrs. Gibson, was telling the truth."

Upon arrival at New York City, Operative discontinued.
